That's easy. Other organisms do not deplete what sustains them. If they do, their population crashes. We have artificially extended the carrying capacity of the land (to support US only) in a way no other species has. I personally believe we're still headed for a crash, but with how much starvation there is already, maybe we're already "crashing."

Also, we've created a host of chemicals that have never occurred in nature. That's happened before, a few kinds, but there are literally thousands.

I don't think the proper reaction to this film is to take a view opposite of human superiority, but rather, to recognize that ALL value assertions regarding life are fallacious. Plus, if you thought anthropocentrism was hostile to life, imagine the devaluing of life in general that would be warranted under it's opposite. The goal of Black liberation isn't to kill white. Similarly, the goal here is not to reverse a fallacy, but to raise new subjectivity outside of it. You're welcome.

Very anthropocentric you are... what exactly makes you think that if an asteroid hits this planet we can survive, we can't do everything but in fact cause more harm to the environment than any animal specie has.. You do realize our planet is one of the smallest in the Milky Way alone. I hope you don't think we own the whole galaxy as well, that's a joke, seriously. According to the galaxy we are just as equal as any life form on this tiny planet we dwell in.

That's a pretty ignorant comment. All animals have language. If you want to use dogs as an example, wagging their tale means they are happy/excited. Putting their tail under their legs mean they are scared. Ears perked up means they are alert. If they are moving towards you with their head low and looking down, they are telling you they are submissive and mean no harm. I can go on and on about their language and those examples are just some of the most well know ones.

This is a great film! I don't think intelligence or anything that we humans have make us any more morally valuable. I mean, morality should be defined by capacity to suffer and nothing else. But I still feel it simply can't be denied that there is something special (not morally but intellectually) about humans. I mean I'm not saying this in any form of supremacist way bt humans have achieved in knowing things, building things and going to places that no other species has, but I still loved this!

Reply

Soixante68 2 months ago

Claiming that the planet would be a lot better off without humans implies that there is something special about humans. It draws a fundamental distinction between humans (bad) and the rest of life on Earth (good). If humans aren't special, then they cannot be "bad", because they are just a component of nature. If they can be "bad", the you have to explain how this non-natural separation occurred, which is quite difficult if you adhere to the theory of evolution.

Kaminoneh, human property is a theory created in your head. Animals include every sentient species except our own. We are not superior to non-human animals, we simply control and abuse them for food, clothing, experiments and our entertainment. We abuse every species except our own because we are a selfish species, We are selfish naturally, just as most species of non-human animals are. But I believe that we've gone a long way. We've have given human slaves liberation, it's time... EVOLVE!

Also, i feel as though we are stunted by technology as crazy as it sounds. Because we need all these things to survive, we have created things from the exploitation of our land. Imagine humans without a plane, without the internet. We could be more spiritual, cars make us lazy and slow, planes make us never try to achieve natural flight, phones stop us trying telepathy, electricity stunts us from using the suns energy, internet is great but it stops us from experiencing the real world

vile pitchers 3 months ago

This is a great documentary, it gets better as it goes along! I still feel that it needs to go into more depth about the interdependence between living things. Its a great starting point, i'd like to see one on how we can adopt other species characteristics or how humanity would be without technology - would we progress further without tools, gain telepathy, ability to fly? Some of our planes,cars, phones, language are they good as evolutionary, or do they stunt our intelligence and potential?

You cant say intelligence its equal to ex a better ability to see. Humans with their ability (intelligence) can reach all the other abilities even become better at them. The ability of our humans can make us survive in different and more hostile environments. We can pass almost every threat we face. If tomorrow a asteroid threatens our survival we are the only one who can do something about it BECAUSE OF INTELLIGENCE who is the best ability a specie can have.Anyone disagrees? i don't think so...

Yes, "dominion over the earth?" Like it or not, the "image" God created us in isn't completely God-like but it's close enough that we are capable of destroying that world. I guess that's dominion. There's some responsibility that goes with that "dominion." Maybe that's why we have been given the ability to reason and the ability to bt... and the wisdom to tell the difference... and the ability to choose one over the other. It looks like now we prefer the taste of BS. Expt over!

Reply · in reply to littlemisssmargariita (Show the comment)Charles Crummer 4 months ago

One of the things that humans bring to the table of survival is the ability to reason. Lately, at least in the US, there has been an evolution towards preferring rhetoric. As if convincing a lot of people of something makes it true. (Witness the Global Warming discussion.) Socrates and Plato had a problem with Cicero and Gorgias on this point. In the face of the complete failure of the Randian nonsense, it still is very influential. Maybe this means we humans are on the way out.

Strangely I too live in Australia.

Partly on account of this, I have lived with many other species ... dogs, cats, sheep, cattle, pigs and various birds; thus it is merely common sense to me that there is NO fundamental difference between ourselves and other species; except that we lack ALL natural survival attributes and solely depend on artificial means to survive.

We are born naked and helpless for at least 16 years. Think on that!

Reply ·

Gerry Hiles 4 months ago

Rene Descartes should be forgiven, because he was brought up to believe that the soul/mind, was something separate from the body, according to Catholic doctrine. BUT he examined himself and realized that "I am", "I exist" ... as a feeling/emotional being. (Read his Meditations.)

Before Descartes even our own species was denied an intrinsic soul/self by the PTB, though Socrates/Plato had described "the soul" two millenia before.

Descartes should be viewed as the re-genesis of ancient wisdom.

Reply ·

Gerry Hiles 4 months ago

David Hume: "If it was not for our passions and emotions, we could not have any idea of a substance."

If neither our species, nor any other, did not FEEL hunger and therefore attribute various substances as having the quality of 'food' - from grass to rump steak - all species would be dead.

David Hume also reckoned that unless a paradox is involved, a subject is probably not worth considering.

WOAH-I wrote this note on facebook in Aug. 2011....did you guys read my note and get inspired to make this film ?? or are we just on the same wave-length? Love it: Humans are the Most 'Intelligent' Species.....

We often hear this as a justification for many things that humans do.

Let's examine where this might come from. When humans say we are the 'most intelligent' it refers to some hierarchy, with the human self positioning his/her own species at the top, but what does that mean....

Your comment is a great example of the sad attempts omnivores use to justify their diet. You think by accusing vegans of being harmful to microorganisms that you have the right to support animal testing and their consumption? The difference between you and me is that when I lay my head down at night I don't think of the suffering and barbaric slaughters of microorganisms. I think of the legitimate suffering of millions of chickens, pigs, cows, primates, dogs, cats, fish; but to each their own...

as true as this is, this docu doesnt take into account that even disabled and/or retarded humans survive, that we archived and unrivaled low infant mortality, and that we domesticated other animals, and became apex predator with very weak jaw & upped body muscles, no claws or spikes, no chem warfare organs, no night vision, weak hearing, nearly nonexistent sense of smell, and mediocre eyesight. The primary reason that people hold to your particular ideology is that humans are so disconnected to the natural world. We no longer hunt for our food or witness how other species consume one another. The fact is every time you eat a vegetable you are consuming micro-organisms that live on the food, or does that not count because you are unable to see them? Any way you slice it (pardon the pun) you are a meat eater. Can I suggest an excellent book called the Vegetarian Myth by Lierre Keith.

Humans do the same thing when talking to one another. There is no doubt that many humans are arrogant and ignorant, led by megalomaniacs to do horrible things to ourselves and our planet. However, we have captured the power of the Sun, soon we will have the capacity to travel to the stars, and with genetic engineering and advances in computer technology there seems no limit to what we could do. We already have the knowledge of how to live in peace and in balance, although the masses are fooled to live competition. Humanity just needs to wake up!

The evolutionary payoff for our digestive system shrinking and our brains growing is believed to have happened when we became omnivorous. Preying on another animal is not the same as animal cruelty, and we do need animal flesh for certain nutrients that would otherwise be very hard to come by.

If survival is the meaning of life, then our tendency to stockpile weapons of mass destruction is counter intuitive to the meaning of life. We are therefore inferior beings.

Also, if defence can be described as the pursuit to preserve of life, then how can we justify WMDs as defence? Why do no countries admit to having an offensive budget? War has to come from somewhere, no war can be started by defending oneself.

This statement struck me ... "as soon as humans begin to think they start making mistakes". The problem with our technology is that we rely on it, thinking that our inventions are fail-proof. But large and small, from failing wifi that destroys your day of work to Fukushima that destroys an entire city, we are reminded (without success of actually remembering), that we aren't that brilliant after all. Sadly, we aren't intelligent enough to give up on the idea of nuclear power.

We can't build like beavers or termites or smell cancer etc, as the film points out . What is superior any way ? The whole concept is troubling . Does being superior mean you win the right to destroy those that are not ? Is that really all there is ?

You still don't get it... your perception of awesomeness, superiority, intelligence, life, is not important from perspective of other living beings, and therefore you are not superior to anybody, you just are, existing with all other creatures. For your argument to be true, you must assume that people are by nature EVIL.

And it is well known that people are born as blank cards in terms of character, values, worldview, morality, and that we are shaped by environment and society.

I will even partially disprove my argument cause they made those studies on very young babies and well over half of them shown signs of empathy, sense of fairness etc. Not a deal braker that we are born "good" but definitely interesting.

They inflict pain and death for amusement, for profit, for sheer malice. No other animal is so vile.

I wonder why these people who take so much pride in their countries, human accomplishments, etc...normally things that they personally had nothing to do with...when there are so many more things we should be ashamed of.

I will be proud of the human race once we construct an equal, compassionate society for all creatures. Not before.

Vegetables are nutritionally rich. You get enough protein by eating them. This is knowledge. It is also knowledge that meat is less healthy than living without. So meat is in other words an unethical, environmentally damaging, resource destroying and unhealthy and unnecessary kind of food. So by eating meat you contribute to unnecessary suffering, unnecessary resource destruction, environmental damage and your own bad health. These are facts. Perhaps you should check your "sources".

Actually, humans can't kill everything on Earth. All approx. 30,000 of humanity's nuclear bombs ignited in one spot would only be a fraction as powerful as the 2004 earthquake that caused the tsunami. BTW, plants are thriving near Chernobyl. It's humans and other large mammals who would be screwed.

Humans cannot photosynthesize, so we would have zero food source if there were no plants or algae. Our oxygen would also deplete so rapidly we would probably die of suffocation first.

Reply ·

if we are not superior then one may argue that it's completely OK to extinguish any of the lifeforms that are unbeneficial to us and elevate those who are. it is completely rational. without superiority we DO NOT CARRY ANY RESPONSIBILITY towards other creatures.

varied skills not specialization makes a great creature. and we are varied enough to empathize with others. otherwise ... KILL EM ALL. therefore your arguments are invalid.

1 of the qualities that humans have that is not possessed by other animals is the ability to substantially manipulate their environment, often in ways that are destructive and ecologically unsustainable. Whether humans are "superior" by some criteria or not, we have a responsibility to ourselves and to the biosphere to reign in our destructiveness before we cause the extinction of 1000s of species including our own. Authors like Martin Rees, Lester R Brown, Derrick Jensen concur.

Reply ·

We're far from the only animals to do it though. There are several ant species for instance who also remarkably change their surroundings. We just do it on a much larger scale because our societies are huge. The size is also the main reason why our way of life isn't sustainable.

A lot of humans believe they are superior because of the possessions we hold, our cars, homes, clothes even our flat screen TV perhaps but where do all/most of these things come from....Oil, Which all in all was a disaster for humankind if we hadn't discovered it we would build our families based on what the planet can sustain rather than how much money we have the human population would barely have surpassed 1 billion by now. If you want to do one thing for the planet.... don't have children.

There is not such thing like human superiority,the road human species chose from the beginning of times is the road of obedience and slavery to a destructive system,becoming more and more artificial,degenerated and corrupt completely dependent of the same system who lately created the so called "civilized society" where slavery,exploitation,cruelty,killing,abuse,torture are seen like normal and justified,it can't be compared with non-human species' genuine honest and harmonious way of living.

If we consider ourselves superior on the basis of our intellect, then logic would entail that a superior alien intellect would have the moral right to enslave us.

I don't think aliens would ever do this however, since their superior intellect even from our own would demand a more critical outlook.

If they did have the outlook of humans in its current form, they would have wiped themselves out.

Is man the superior animal on Earth? Up until 5 months ago I would have said no. However this attitude has now changed. Man is superior to all other animals in that his brain is large enough and complex enough to host an energy light being from the Spirit Realm. Don't laugh. First misinformation: food. Without current production, people will starve, even with best planning & technology. Vegetables are nutritionally poor (esp. low on proteins). Second: Jesus. Matthew 10:34, "Think not that I have come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace, but a sword." The rest is worse, believe me. If you want to quote Jesus I guess the only source is the Bible, so read it.

First problem with this movie's argument: food. Without the current rate of production, people will starve and die, even with the best planning & technology. Any animal expert will tell you that vegetables are nutritionally poor (that's why herbivores have up to 5 or so stomachs and need to eat all the time).

The very real sensitivity of non-humans, their joys, their suffering, their thinking, their high moral value, are not questioned by any human being who thinks independently, with a healthy mind and spirit. The need to be called "superior" automatically makes us inferior. Time for some human humility and serious changes in how we view the world.
